

How to Get a Master's Degree at SPbPU

A two-tier system of education, which includes bachelor's and master's degree programs, has been functioning in the Russian higher education for five years. A bachelor's degree program lasts four years and provides fully valid higher education. Those looking to deepen their knowledge in a certain field have the option to study for two more years and get a master's degree. In the context of modern, knowledge-driven economy, students are more interested in continuing their education and improving their skills. That is why Peter the Great St. Petersburg Polytechnic University held a Winter School for those who are entering a master's degree program.
