

More than 80 international students will study at Polytechnic University as exchange students in the spring semester

More than 80 international students from partner universities arrived at Polytechnic on an exchange program. During the spring semester, they will study new materials, energy, economics, business and management, computer science, linguistics, political science, and many other areas.

The geography of the countries, from where the students come, this year is much wider than last year: the list of coordinators of academic mobility programs includes 13 countries. By comparison, last spring semester 28 students from nine countries participated in the exchange program.

At TH Wildau I am studying business administration, here at the Polytechnic University I chose economics and management. I'm interested in this field, I work in it, you could say it's part of my life. I want to see how economics and management are taught in other countries, to see the similarities and differences. I plan to get a lot of useful experience and improve my existing knowledge. I'm looking forward to the classes! shared Nico BÖTTCHER, a student from Germany.

At the end of last week, there was an orientation meeting for international students, where they received up-to-date information about studying, living, migration rules, and the epidemiological situation. Beginning this week they will have meetings with coordinators where curricula and schedules will be coordinated on an individual basis. In parallel, in compliance with all necessary security measures, entertainment and educational activities will take place: it is necessary so that international students could get acquainted with each other and more quickly adapt to life in Russia.

At the University of Seville, I am studying general engineering, a field that covers all fields of engineering sciences. At SPbPU, I will be studying energy engineering. I heard that this is a very popular and in-demand field here, many famous scientists developed energy engineering at the Polytechnic University. I plan to get new advantageous experience, said Nabil BOUGRIA SANCHEZ, a student from Spain.
